... the authors at once most representative of their age and most pertinent and open to change, in my opinion will be those that ...

- will be aware of the explosive character of globalization in its present form;
- will avoid throwing out the universal baby with the global bath water;
- will be aware of the fact that the problem of freedom comes up in every culture and not just in connection with the relations among cultures;
- will know that history has not ended;
- will not forget that the individual is the measure of all things;
- will endeavor to create a singular voice whose existence alone will disprove the ineluctable character of the law of silence, of the mass-media show and consumer resignation ...
