... if DNA was the most important discovery of the century that has just ended, the Internet has been the most important of all inventions, ever. Never in its history has humankind had at its fingertips such a powerful and effective tool for the growth of learning and the spread of knowledge. The circulation of ideas is free. Internet is a great and important invention destined to change the world, born to benefit all and not just a few. A true revolution on which one cannot and should not make money...
